SOME SMILES

Humor and Danger

There are some people who go to pieces when they meet a dangerous situation. There are those who are intelligent and can think clearly in a crisis. And there are the few gifted ones who have a fundamental sense of humor. In a dangerous situation, where their life or property is threatened, they can get out of it safely by the use of humor. Thought at the given moment, it may not look like humor. Juan Mendoza, the South American millionaire, was just such a man.

He had been listening to his radio and thus learned that another revolution had taken place in his home country. The cry being: "Down with the rich! Take away their property." So he merely sat outside of his great country estate awaiting the arrival of the revolutionists. Two hours later, the Colonel and his men arrived.

"We are going to take all your money and divide it equally with the people of this country," he was informed. "If you do not resist and give us your money, we will let you live. Do not oppose us."

"I agree with you 100%," was his startling reply. "I shall do as you just requested. I shall divide my wealth equally among my fellow country men. Long live the revolution! I have 20 million pesos. You know this from my last income tax report. There are ten million people in this country. So if I do what you just ordered me to do, it comes out two pesos to a person. Let me begin with you and your men. Here are two pesos each. Send every person in the country for his or her two pesos. I shall give it to them."

In utter bafflement, they went away and let him keep his money!

The Roller Coaster Rider

I am what you can call a photographer-news reporter. My assignment is often to get a picture story of something a person does that is unusual and even spectacular. A fellow sits on top of a flag pole and wants to set a new world record. There is my story. Or a surf board rider wants to try it on his head-there is another story for me. I get tips from people and also from publicity agents. This one came from a friend of mine: "Go to the roller coaster in Seaside Park. You see a twenty thousand dollar car drive up. . . a chauffeur and a footman. Each day the brings a man who must be about seventy-five rs old. At least that age. He takes thirty rides and no more. Why? There's your story-if you can find it."

So I drive out to Seaside Park. Buy a ticket for a ride on the roller coaster. And sure enough. I spot that old man. Well dressed-his suit must have set him back at least 300 bucks. He gets in and takes a ride. When he comes back he checks off the ride on what looks like a score card. I watch him take eight rides. Then he takes a rest. This is my cue to go up to him.

"My name is Bill Jensene," I begin. "I do a column about people. Mind telling me why at your age you take so many rides on the roller coaster?"

He asks for my credentials which I show him. Then he tells me the answer: "My favorite young grandson bought this roller coaster at the start of the season. I loaned him three thousand dollars. Business isn't too good. He can't pay me back in cash. So I take it out on rides at .25 a ride. Good idea, eh?"

Running a Railroad

I live in the suburbs. And in common with my friends and my neighbors, I take the train to the Big City. It is almost the worst railroad in the country. Every morning at 6:45, I tune in on the local radio station. We get the bad news like this: "The 7:30 has been cancelled. The 7:45 will be a half hour late." And when you get into a train, you stand. Sometimes on the floor and sometimes on another person's feet. Many years ago, when I was young and lived in another part of the country, I represented a railroad. So that is why I do sympathize with their problems.

This particular railroad was a single track affair. Let me explain how it worked to you. There was only one track for the distance of 1753 miles. Every hundred miles there was what we called "a waiting siding." The train going south, waited on this extra length of track, while the train going north proceded. You want to know what would happen if a train going north met a train going south-on the same stretch of track? One big collision! And one morning it took place. The only witness was a track walker. Age 65 and worked for the railroad for 40 years. I asked him this question: "When you looked north, what did you see?" His reply: "The train coming south." Next question: "When you looked south, what did you see?" His reply: "The train coming north?" Finally: "What thoughts went through your mind just then?" His reply: "Mister, I ain't got much education. For 40 years I have been walking the tracks checking the rails. But I just couldn't help saying to myself-what a crazy way to run a railroad."
